Principal's Message:

Attendance affects achievement

The evidence shows that attendance is directly related to how well learners achieve, in both primary and secondary school. The more learners attend, the higher their achievement. There is no safe level of non-attendance – even missing just two days a term is linked to lower achievement. Missing school leads to lost opportunities to learn, which impacts on achievement, even if learners have good engagement. The impact of missing school continues to build over time as learners fall further behind their peers. This means that non-regular attendance has lasting negative impacts.

Attendance affects wellbeing

Going to school is important for learners' wellbeing. The research shows that more frequent non-attendance is associated with worse wellbeing outcomes, including schoolwork-related anxiety, decreased sense of belonging, fewer friendships with peers, exposure to bullying, and feeling like teachers are being unfair. The relationship between attendance and wellbeing works both ways: poor wellbeing leads to poor attendance, and poor attendance leads to poor wellbeing.

Attendance matters at primary school

Establishing regular attendance routines early in children's schooling is important. How often learners go to school in early primary school predicts how much they will attend in secondary school. Primary school also lays the foundations for future learning as learners develop the skills that are important for being successful in secondary school. Missing school in primary school can create gaps in learning that set learners back in secondary school and contribute to increasing disengagement from school and learning.
